NEW QUESTION: 1

What is the disadvantage of using multiple reducers with the default HashPartitioner and distributing your workload across you cluster?

- A. You will longer be able to take advantage of a Combiner.
- B. By using multiple reducers with the default HashPartitioner, output files may not be in globally sorted order.
- C. There are no concerns with this approach. It is always advisable to use multiple reduces.
- D. You will not be able to compress the intermediate data.

Answer: B

Explanation:

Multiple reducers and total ordering

If your sort job runs with multiple reducers (either because `mapreduce.job.reduces` in `mapred-site.xml` has been set to a number larger than 1, or because you've used the `-r` option to specify the number of reducers on the command-line), then by default Hadoop will use the HashPartitioner to distribute records across the reducers. Use of the HashPartitioner means that you can't concatenate your output files to create a single sorted output file. To do this you'll need total ordering,
