NEW QUESTION: 2

You have been assigned to maintain a Forms application that was designed by a developer who has left the company.

The CV_Tools canvas contains several buttons. There is limited space on the canvas, but the first button is not quite wide enough to display its complete label. In the Layout Editor, you widen the button slightly and find that the width of all the buttons increases so that they now overlap each other.

What could have caused this problem?

- A. The first button was copied from another button.
- B. All other buttons were subclassed from the first button.
- C. The buttons inherit their properties from the same property class.
- D. The buttons were created by using a Smart Class.
- E. All other buttons were copied from the first button.
- F. The buttons were created by dragging them from an object group.
- G. The first button was subclassed from another button.

Answer: B

Explanation:

Explanation/Reference:

Explanation:

D (not F): With subclassing you can make an exact copy, and then alter the properties of some objects if desired. If you change the parent class, the changes also apply to the properties of the subclassed object that you have not altered. However, any properties that you override remain overridden. This provides a powerful object inheritance model.

Incorrect answers:

A: A property class is a named object that contains a list of properties and their settings. You can use property classes to increase productivity and improve network performance.

Here are some of the uses of a property class:

* It increases productivity by setting standard or frequently used values for common properties and associates them with several form builder objects.

* It defines standard properties not just for one particular object but also for several at a time. This results in increased productivity, because it eliminates the time spent on setting identical properties for several objects.

* It improves network performance by increasing the efficiency of message diffing.

C: A SmartClass is a special member of an Object Library. It can be used to easily subclass existing objects in a form using the SmartClass option from the right mouse button popup menu.

E, G: When you copy an object, a separate, unique version of that object is created in the target module.

Any objects owned by the copied object also get copied. Changes made to a copied object in the source module do not affect the copied object in the target module.

NEW QUESTION: 3

Which additional capability was added in IGMPv3?

- A. authentication support between the multicast receivers and the last hop router
- B. group-specific host membership queries support
- C. IPv6 support

D. leave group messages support

E. source filtering support

Answer: E

Explanation:

IGMP is the protocol used by IPv4 systems to report their IP multicast group memberships to neighboring multicast routers. Version 3 of IGMP adds support for "source filtering", that is, the ability for a system to report interest in receiving packets only from specific source addresses, or from all but specific source addresses, sent to a particular multicast address. That information may be used by multicast routing protocols to avoid delivering multicast packets from specific sources to networks where there are no interested receivers.

NEW QUESTION: 4
