NEW QUESTION: 2

Identify three mandatory items for creating a rule set in Oracle Fusion.

- A. Name
- B. Effective Start Date and Effective End Date
- C. Work Object
- D. Candidate Object
- E. Business Object

Answer: C,D,E

Explanation:

The work object, candidate object, and attributes are components that fit together to create assignment objects that are used in rule-based and territory-based assignment. Work objects are business objects that require assignment such as leads and opportunities. Candidate objects are business objects such as resources and territories that are assigned to work objects. When you create candidate objects, you can select attributes for them that are later used in rules or mappings. These candidate objects also become candidates that are available for association when you create work objects. When you create work objects, you can select attributes for them also, as well as associating one or more candidates.

Note 1:A work object is a business object that requires assignment such as a lead or an opportunity. Creating a work object involves entering its application information, selecting its attributes to use during assignment, and associating one or more candidates.

Note: Developing Personalization using User Segments, Campaigns, Placeholders, and Content Selectors can be done with JSP tags with very little Java coding. There might be times, however, when you want more flexibility in your Personalization. You can achieve this by creating and deploying a rule set, which uses the Rules Controls and the RulesManager EJB.

Note 2: A candidate object is a business object such as a resource or a territory that is associated with one or more work objects for eventual assignment. Creating a candidate object involves entering its application information and selecting its attributes to use in rules or mappings. A special type of candidate object is a classification object. This type of candidate object does not represent a business object that gets assigned to a work object. It is used only with classification rules and is used primarily to rank or qualify leads.
