Which of the following would have the HIGHEST priority in a business continuity plan (BCP)?

- A. Relocating operations to an alternative site
- B. Recovering sensitive processes
- C. Restoring the site
- D. Resuming critical processes

Answer: D

Explanation:

The resumption of critical processes has the highest priority as it enables business processes to begin immediately after the interruption and not later than the declared mean time between failure (MTBF). Recovery of sensitive processes refers to recovering the vital and sensitive processes that can be performed manually at a tolerable cost for an extended period of time and those that are not marked as high priority. Repairing and restoring the site to original status and resuming the business operations are time consuming operations and are not the highest priority. Relocating operations to an alternative site, either temporarily or permanently depending on the interruption, is a time consuming process; moreover, relocation may not be required.
