Answer: B

NEW QUESTION: 2

Which software development model is actually a meta-model that incorporates a number of the software development models?

- A. The Critical Path Model (CPM)
- B. The modified Waterfall model
- C. The Waterfall model
- D. The Spiral model

Answer: D

Explanation:

Explanation/Reference:

The spiral model is actually a meta-model that incorporates a number of the software development models.

This model depicts a spiral that incorporates the various phases of software development. The model states that each cycle of the spiral involves the same series of steps for each part of the project. CPM refers to the Critical Path Methodology.

NEW QUESTION: 3

Consider A TAS for testing a desktop application via its GUI. All the test cases of the automated test suite contain the same identical sequences of steps at the beginning (to create the necessary objects when doing a preliminary configuration of the test environment and at the end (to remove everything created -specifically for the test itself during the preliminary configuration of the test environment). All automated test cases use the same set of assertion functions from a shared library, for verifying the values in the GUI fields (e.g text boxes).

What is the BEST recommendation for improving the TAS?

- A. Implementing keywords with higher level of granularity
- B. Adopting a set of standard verification methods for use by all automated tests
- C. Improving the architecture of the application in order to improve its testability
- D. Implementing standard setup and teardown functions at test case level

Answer: A
