NEW QUESTION: 3

- A. `int i = new Random (). nextInt (100)+1;`
- B. `int i = (int) Math.random (1, 101);`
- C. `int i = ThreadLocalRandom.current().nextInt (1, 101);`
- D. `int i = (int) Math.random()*nextInt(1, 101);`
- E. `int i = ThreadSaferandom.current().nextInt(1, 101);`

Answer: C

Explanation:

public class ThreadLocalRandom extends Random A random number generator isolated to the current thread. Like the global Random generator used by the Math class, a ThreadLocalRandom is initialized with an internally generated seed that may not otherwise be modified. When applicable, use of ThreadLocalRandom rather than shared Random objects in concurrent programs will typically encounter much less overhead and contention. Use of ThreadLocalRandom is particularly appropriate when multiple tasks (for example, each a ForkJoinTask) use random numbers in parallel in thread pools. Usages of this class should typically be of the form: ThreadLocalRandom.current().nextX(...) (where X is Int, Long, etc). When all usages are of this form, it is never possible to accidentally share a ThreadLocalRandom across multiple threads. This class also provides additional commonly used bounded random generation methods.
