NEW QUESTION: 2

You purchased a network scanner six months ago. In spite of regularly conducting scans using this software, you have noticed that attackers have been able to compromise your servers over the last month.

Which of the following is the most likely explanation for this problem?

- A. The network scanner is no substitute for scans conducted by an individual.
- B. The network scanner needs to be replaced.
- C. The network scanner has a trojan.
- D. The network scanner needs an update.

Answer: D

NEW QUESTION: 3

What can cause a node in an SRX Series chassis cluster to be in the disabled state?

- A. Both the control and fabric links between the two nodes go down at the same time.
- B. The backup node is configured to go into a disabled state until the active node has a failure
- C. The number of missed heartbeats reaches the configured threshold.
- D. The primary node loses all power.

Answer: C

Explanation:

JUNOS Software transmits heartbeat signals over the control link at a configured interval. The system uses heartbeat transmissions to determine the "health" of the control link. If the number of missed heartbeats has reached the configured threshold, the system assesses whether a failure condition exists. For a chassis cluster with one control link, if the control link goes down, all redundancy groups on the secondary node go to the ineligible state and eventually to the disabled state.
