NEW QUESTION: 4

Service A is an entity service that provides a Get capability that returns a data value that is frequently changed.

Service Consumer A invokes Service A in order to request this data value (1). For Service A to carry out this request, it must invoke Service B (2), a utility service that interacts (3.4) with the database in which the data value is stored, Regardless of whether the data value changed. Service B returns the latest value to Service A (5), and Service A returns the latest value to Service Consumer A (6).

The data value is changed when the legacy client program updates the database (7). When this change happens is not predictable. Note also that Service A and Service B are not always available at the same time.

Any time the data value changes. Service Consumer A needs to receive it as soon as possible. Therefore, Service Consumer A initiates the message exchange shown in the Figure several times a day. When it receives the same data value as before, the response from Service A is ignored. When Service A provides an updated data value, Service Consumer A can process it to carry out its task.

Because Service A and Service B are not always available at the same times, messages are getting lost and several invocation attempts by Service Consumer A fail. What steps can be taken to solve this problem?

A. The Asynchronous Queuing pattern can be applied so that messaging queues are established between Service A and Service B and between Service Consumer A and Service A. This way, messages are never lost due to the unavailability of Service A or Service B.

B. The Asynchronous Queuing pattern can be applied so that a messaging queue is established between Service Consumer A and Service A.

This way, messages are never lost due to the unavailability of Service A or Service B.

The Service Agent pattern can be further applied to establish a service agent that makes a log entry each time a runtime exception occurs.

C. The Asynchronous Queuing pattern can be applied so that a messaging queue is established between Service A and Service B. This way, messages are never lost due to the unavailability of Service A or Service B. The Service Agent pattern can be further applied to establish a service agent that makes a log entry and issues a notification when re-transmission attempts by the messaging queue exceeds a pre-determined quantity.

D. None of the above.
