NEW QUESTION: 3

You have a Windows virtual machine (VM) that is experiencing poor application performance. You suspect the problem is a lack of available memory. You open Windows Task Manager and see that 30% of the memory within the VM is not currently being used. What does this indicate and what should you do next?

- A. The application problems are definitely due to a non-memory related problem. You should check your CPU utilization in Windows Task Manager.
- B. Windows Task Manager is not reading actual memory usage in the VM. You should run the Windows System Monitor to get a precise reading on memory usage.
- C. The VM has memory available, however it may not actually have physical memory available. You should check for VM kernel swap activity on the ESX Server host.
- D. The application problems are definitely due to a non-memory related problem. You should check your CPU affinity settings for this VM.
