Which choice below does NOT accurately describe a task of the Configuration Control Board?

- A. The CCB is responsible for assuring that changes made do not jeopardize the soundness of the verification system.
- B. The CCB should meet periodically to discuss configuration status accounting reports.
- C. The CCB assures that the changes made are approved, tested, documented, and implemented correctly.
- D. The CCB is responsible for documenting the status of configuration control activities.

Answer: D

Explanation:

All analytical and design tasks are conducted under the direction of the vendors corporate entity called the Configuration Control Board (CCB). The CCB is headed by a chairperson who is responsible for assuring that changes made do not jeopardize the soundness of the verification system and assures that the changes made are approved, tested, documented, and implemented correctly. The members of the CCB should interact periodically, either through formal meetings or other available means, to discuss configuration management topics such as proposed changes, configuration status accounting reports, and other topics that may be of interest to the different areas of the system development. These interactions should be held to keep the entire system team updated on all advancements or alterations in the verification system. Answer b describes configuration accounting. Configuration accounting documents the status of configuration control activities and, in general, provides the information needed to manage a configuration effectively. The configuration accounting reports are reviewed by the CCB. Source: NCSC-TG-014-89, Guidelines for Formal Verification Systems.
