NEW QUESTION: 3

You found a message on a public discussion forum mentioning a Vulnerability (for example, CVE2006-5794), which could affect some versions of OpenSSH in Linux distribution. Identify the command that would allow you to see whether this CVE has been applied.

- A. `rpm -q --changelogopenssh | grep 5794`
- B. `rpm -qa | grep openssh | grep 5794`
- C. `yum sec-list cves`
- D. `yum listcview openssh`

Answer: A

Explanation:

*The command `rpm -q --changelog rpm` displays a detailed list of information (updates, configuration, modifications, etc.) about a specific package. This example shows information about the package rpm. However, only the last five change entries in the RPM database are listed. All entries (dating back the last two years) are included in the package itself. This query only works if CD 1 is mounted at /media/cdrom:

rpm -qp --changelog /media/cdrom/suse/i586/rpm-3*.rpm
```

*Is the patch RPM suitable for my system?

To check this, first query the installed version of the package. For pine, this can be done with

rpm -q pine pine-4.44-188
```

Incorrect:

not C:

*qa stands for "Query All"

Assuming you are attempting to find out if you have the Very Secure FTP Daemon installed, you want:

```
rpm -qa | grep vsftp

rpm -qa will show you all installed RPMs, piping it through grep will limit the list to RPMs containing the string "vsftp".
