In which of the following phases of system development life cycle (SDLC) is contingency planning most important?

- A. Initiation
- B. Development/acquisition
- C. Implementation
- D. Operation/maintenance

Answer: A

Explanation:

Explanation/Reference:

Explanation:

The system development life cycle (SDLC) is the process of developing an information system. The SDLC includes the Initiation, Development and Acquisition, Implementation, Operation and Maintenance and Disposal phases.

The initiation phase includes determining the system's goals and feasibility. The systems feasibility includes its system requirements and how well they match with operational processes. The requirements of a contingency plan should be analyzed based on the system's requirements and design.

Incorrect Answers:

B: Contingency planning is most important in the initiation phase, not the Development/acquisition phase. It is important to create a contingency plan in the earliest possible stage of a project.

C: Contingency planning is most important in the initiation phase, not the Implementation phase. The contingency plan should be created before the system is implemented.

D: Contingency planning is most important in the initiation phase, not the operation/maintenance phase. It is important to create a contingency plan in the earliest possible stage of a project, not after the system has been deployed.
